There were two races for farmers of Fairfield and Westchester for which a prize of $100 for the winner of each event was presented by Robert Law, Jr., Who gave to each starter a lap robe, also the Blind Brook, an open event.

Both races brought out some excellent hunters and were ridden by practically all the men riders of the district. Splashes of color blazed through the green of hunters and were ridden by practically all the men riders of the district. Splashes of color blazed through the green of Westchester, the owners sporting their colors on the turf and in the paddock, and what might have been lacking in variety was made up in the costumes of the women, who were there in large numbers. In Fairfield, a flat race and the Bilind Brook race, two special features, the riders for first and second place finishing less than a neck apart in each event.

Capt. A. M. Marchall, riding Mr. Bowman's Galloway, was thrown from his mount in the Bilind Brook, sustaining a badly bruised back. He was removed to Mr. Bowman's home in an ambulance.

The judges were Charles D. Lanier, James Perkins and Robert Law, Jr. The race meet committee consisted of Guy Carleton, chairman; Mr. Bowman, Edward B. Glove, Arthur L. Warthur, Jr., Robert Law, Jr., and Louis W. Wiertz.
